Cleveland M. McCarty, DE '61

On July 3, 2018, Cleveland Mather McCarty passed away from natural causes at the Balfour Retirement Community in Louisville. He was 85. A longstanding pillar of the Boulder Community, Dr. Cleveland McCarty was passionate about being the best dentist he could be, caring for his family - and mountains. He arrived in the 1950s to attend the University of Colorado and his legacy has loomed large over the city ever since. Cleve was a Renaissance man and Colorado mountaineering pioneer who co-authored the first comprehensive guide to climbing in and around Boulder and whose climbing and nature photographs have adorned the walls of hotels and restaurants as well as the pages of guides and magazines.

Cleve was born June 5, 1933 in Denver to Alston and Gertrude McCarty, and it didn't take long for him to discover climbing. "The first time I started to grab the bark on a cottonwood tree out in the backyard... I could go right up it, and no one else could," he said in 2005. Cleve quickly graduated from tree and jungle gym to spire and mountain as a young teenager. He attended Graland School in Denver and Fountain Valley in Colorado Springs and graduated from the Choate School in Wallingford, Conn. In 1957, Cleve graduated with a degree in marketing from CU Boulder. While at CU, Cleve fully embraced his love for mountains. He became a climbing guide with the university recreation center and the Colorado Mountain Club and was active with Rocky Mountain Rescue. In 1959, Cleve became the first person to climb all 54 of Colorado's 14,000-foot peaks in 54 days on a bet from a fellow climber. "He said, 'Nah, nah, you can't do that. I'll bet you fifty bucks.' I took him up on it. I don't think he's ever paid me," he remembered with a chuckle. Nearly 35 years later, he joined his son Conrad in climbing a number of peaks, and guiding him on technical ascents of others, as Conrad followed in his father's footsteps, summiting all the 14ers in just 31 days. In 1961, he earned a Doctor of Medicine in Dentistry from Washington University in St. Louis. While in dental school, Cleve met Jacquelyn Wedler, and they married in September 1963. Cleve served as a captain in the U.S. Air Force for four years in Germany. Upon his return in 1966, he and Jackie bought their home in Boulder and he opened his dental practice, where he would continue to serve patients until his retirement in 2007. Living in Boulder again afforded him the opportunity to climb and gave him the idea to author a guidebook to the area's ascents. "Our rope was too short, so we were left hanging out in space," Cleve recalled of a harrowing rappel off the Matron near Eldorado Springs. "I thought, 'Hey, there's got to be a guide to this whole area somewhere.'" As it turned out, there wasn't. So, in 1967, he co-authored the first edition of "High Over Boulder" with then-teenage climber Pat Ament. The first comprehensive guide to climbing and mountaineering in and around the city, the guidebook is now in its fifth edition. Cleve would continue to tackle alpine challenges throughout his life, climbing the highest peaks in Europe and North America, including the 8th ascent of Denali's challenging Cassin Ridge. In 1977, he and his then-12-year-old son Eric mounted their bicycles at 2 a.m. in Boulder, rode to the trailhead of Longs Peak, climbed the mountain via the technical Kieners Route, descended the Cable Route via rappel, then rode home in a single day. Cleve was instrumental in the establishment of Boulder's open-space program, serving on the board in its earliest years. He also served on the Colorado Chautauqua board of directors and was national director of the American Alpine Club. In his career, he expected excellence from himself and his staff for every patient. As a result, 5280 Magazine honored him with its Top Dentist Award and he achieved Mastership of the Academy of Dental Dentistry. He was a lifetime member of the American Dental Association and served as president of the Colorado Dental Association. Always a CU Buffs fan, Cleve and Jackie were especially ardent during their sons Eric and Tennyson's stellar football careers, traveling to every away game. They continued to support the team after their sons graduated and Cleve became the unofficial CU sports dentist, taking care of athletes and coaches from many sports. He was a founding member of The Meadows Swim and Tennis Club in Boulder and the Walden Hollow Fishing Club on the Colorado River in Granby. He also was a lifetime member of the Denver Athletic Club.

Cleve McCarty is survived by five children, Eric McCarty and his wife Miriam, of Boulder; Conrad McCarty and his wife Kathy, of Boulder; April Shores of Arlington, Va. and her husband Ryan Shores; Chance McCarty and his wife Marjorie, of Laveen, Ariz.; and Somerset McCarty of Boulder; and 12 grandchildren. He was preceded in death by his parents, his brother Alston McCarty, Jr., his sister Ann McCarty, his wife Jacquelyn Wedler McCarty, and sons Cayle and Tennyson.

Bob was proud of the work done by the foundation and the scholarships awarded to many Arcola graduates. To honor his many years of community involvement, Bob, along with Natalie, was a grand marshal for the 2006 Broom Corn Festival. Bob cared deeply about everyone; family, friends, and even new acquaintances. This was exemplified recently at Barnes Jewish Hospital, when many of the nurses would make a visit to Bob the first stop of their morning routines. Bob took the time to ask questions and remembered everyone's stories. Bob, Dad, Dampa, Grandpa, Doc, Doc Bob (he answered to all of them) will be sorely missed by many.
